Some of this month's new books

A) Work or Play We tend to think that children have always spent their time playing or at school until they become adults. Diego Pireno reminds us that in earlier centuries and in some places still today, millions of children had to work. He describes the lives of children around the world in the last 200 years.	B) Money Matters Before money was invented, people exchanged goods or paid with anything that had value for other people – such as shells, stones or even salt. In this book, Joel Sandford, the famous economics professor, explains how we started using coins and banknotes. The book includes a lot of surprising and fascinating facts.
C) No False Notes This is one of the best crime novels of the year. You won't be able to put the book down till you reach the last page! An unlikely detective solves the mystery of a ring of swindlers who print false money – but only after a series of exciting events and dangerous surprises.	D) The Laws of Life Jane Terry is one of our most popular authors for science fiction. She has often been praised for her good style of writing. However, her latest novel is a disappointment. Even with a lot of imagination, the science doesn't add up. The story doesn't make much sense, and the characters are poorly developed.
E) Matter and Lifestyle Carol Conway has written several excellent books describing daily life in the last five centuries. In her latest book, however, she explores how science has developed over time. She highlights how new inventions – from electricity to plastic - impact people's lives. People who know little about the subject will learn a lot from this book.	F) Ganjeera In Ganjeera, Karin Holvorsen creates strange and exciting images in the reader's mind. Her characters lead the reader through mysterious worlds, where the laws of science don't always operate. Holvorsen's skill at writing makes her one of the best known and most popular novelists for young people – every word and every comma matters.
G) The Atlas Akram Al Djabri spent his early childhood in Morocco. When he was six, his father started working in Canada and the whole family soon followed him. Al Djabri now lives in Germany. In this novel for young adults, the hero, Basri, leads a life that is very similar to Al Djabri's. The challenges and rewards of immigration are explored with great insight.	H) Fair or Foul? This is the latest in Pedro Young's long line of action novels and, as always, it's hard to guess what's going to happen next. Each of his novels is set in a different country. The characters of Fair or Foul are a team of young Mexican footballers training for an international match. Will the team make it to the World Cup in the USA?
